

María Cristina Laplagne Sarmiento
Universidad Nacional de San Juan, Argentina.
claplagne@unsj.edu.ar

The scholar is Professor and Researcher at San Juan National University. Master in Higher Education graduated from San Luis National University; PhD student in Philosophy at the Philosophy, Humanities and Arts College; Specialist in Higher Education graduated from San Juan National University; Professor of English Language and Literature; Degree in English Linguistics and Portuguese Teacher. Currently, Research Project Director "Competitiveness, Critical Understanding, Leadership and Communication in the Transversal Competences of the engineer of the new millennium - UNSJ-CICITCA Projects. Co-Director of previous CICITCA and FODO research projects under the UNSJ Research Secretariat. Advisor of current projects "ACE models in engineering competencies for research development and deep learning" and "The commitment of the university with the promotion of innovation in the training of university professionals". UNSJ Fellowship Mobility Programs joint with UNAD, Colombia. Didactics, Virtual Education for Engineering and Cognitive Neurosciences are the areas of concern. Other main interests are the application and consequences of ICTs and LKTs in Higher Education and in the articulation of curricular programs. The inclusiveness and neuro-cognition strategies applied to the Argentine education system are topics about which she has lectured about both domestic and internationally. Other areas of interest are the social and personal impact of neuro-cognitive development on multidisciplinary and trans-disciplinary articulations within the educational system, with special interest in the acquisition of Foreign Languages. She is an international and national congresses academic and scientific committee member. As a Specific and Academic Purposes English Learning books author, her latest book publication is "Integrated Skills Competences for Electromechanical Engineers".